Movies have been a source of entertainment for over a century now. Offering a wide variety of genres for the different interests of its audience, the film industry has been flourishing in many parts of the world.

Among the popular onscreen genres is the musical. In such movies, songs are weaved in and form a part of the storyline. They are entertaining and showcase the versatility of the actors who have been cast (they have to act, sing, perform, and at times, dance).

Needless to say, music lovers thoroughly enjoy musicals. If you are one, here are three movies that you've got to watch.

School of Rock

This is a 2003 comedy directed by Richard Linklater, produced by Scott Rudin, and written by Mike White. The film stars Jack Black, Joan Cusack, and Sarah Silverman. Black plays the role of a struggling rock guitarist who gets kicked out of his band. To make ends meet, he takes up a job as a substitute teacher at a prestigious prep school. The movie was a huge hit during the time of its release and was the highest grossing music-themed comedy of all time until Pitch Perfect 2 released in 2015.

The Sound of Music

A classic, this 1965 drama was produced and directed by Robert Wise. The cast includes Julie Andrews and Christopher Plummer. The story unfolds with Maria, who is training to be a nun in Austria. She is sent to take care of a family of seven children, who have recently lost their mother. Maria loves to sing. Soon, she brings joy and, of course, lots of music into the lives of the family. In fact, you'll recognise some of the featured songs — remember learning Do Re Mi in school?

Pitch Perfect (1, 2, and 3)

This is a comedy series created in 2012. The first part features an ensemble cast, including Anna Kendrick, Skylar Astin, Rebel Wilson, Brittany Snow, Elizabeth Banks, and Anna Camp. Many of these stars return for parts 2 and 3. The story revolves around an all-girl a cappella band in university. An odd group, the students bond with each other through their one mutual interest — singing. Despite multiple fumbles, they vow to make it big by winning national competitions. YT
